Joseph Bezzina (FRAS) is a Sydney based multi-awarded artist. He holds an Advanced Creative Fine Arts Certificate with Attainment in Skills and Practices in Fine Arts. While studying for his certificate Joe received the Highest Achievement Award with five Distinctions. He is a Fellow of the Royal Art Society NSW (RAS) and a teacher at the RAS Art School.

Joseph has won the UTA 'Paint Your Way to Paris', the Wagga Wagga Art Prize, North Sydney Open Prize and the Camberwell Rotary Landscape Art Prize. He is twice the recipient of the Royal Art Society Medal of Distinction and also the Thora Ungar Memorial Award. He has

Also been a Finalist in many major art prizes including, The NSW Parliament Plein Air Landscape Prize, 2009, 8 & 10; The Mosman Art Prize; Salon des Refuses; The Paddington Art Prize; the North Syd. Art Prize; Waverley Art Prize and the Mount Eyre Vineyard Prize.

A quote from Christopher Borg (Gallery 460) "I was immediately attracted to his ability to capture the scale & form of our landscape as well as his sensitive & thoughtful approach to his subject & technique. Joseph's paintings are characterised by a gentle balance between detail & gesture. Moments of focus give way to tone & colour where bold brush stokes break through layered glazes, drips & runs in the paint that form an integral part of a final composition. His works celebrate his immersion in his subject matter & time spent observing the landscape, recording the changing light over time & its corresponding effect on the land."

Our Last Demonstrating Artist: David Lake

OVERVIEW

David's palette was very limited and he began with a pre-prepared Masonite board. Fixed to the board was linen secured with PVA glue evenly spread with brush. The linen was pre-painted with raw umber. The darks and medium tones of the composition were already painted with varying mixes of ultramarine blue plus flinders red violet. That under-painting was completely dry. This work had been done before David came to the demonstration. The reference photograph was a scene on the road leading into the village of Newbridge (country NSW near Bathurst) on a morning after a snowfall overnight.

David began with the sky which was simply grey in the reference photo and he wanted to show the sky with more variation so he painted three bands of palette mixed colour, each band varying in a subtle nuanced way in tone and hue and finally he painted a smallish patch of pure white. He uses paint straight from the tube- no turps or medium and he basically uses a different brush for each colour mix. He does not clean his brushes during a painting session. If need be he wipes them on a clean rag (or on the back of his French box easel). Using a clean brush David then blends the edges of each band so none of them are “hard” but “soft” and merging into one another. The patch of pure white was also blended in an understated way in to suggest a part of the sky where the sun was trying to break through.

The three sky bands were painted with a mix of ultramarine blue plus light red plus titanium white. Variation in the three bands was achieved by different ratios of small quantities of ultramarine blue and light red and larger quantities of white.

Having dealt with the sky David then began on the land working from the background to the foreground in that order. The hue and tone of the background was mixed on the palette from ultramarine blue plus a touch of light red plus plenty of white. The tone achieved was one small step darker than the sky. Then the large tree was painted with its darks: ultramarine blue plus flinders red violet plus raw sienna plus light red followed by its lights (same mix plus white) on the top third of the tree to give it form. Tones were tested on the canvas by a small mark before being brushed on in mass. The trees either side of the main tree were then blocked in similar fashion but varied somewhat in hue and tone from the main tree. The mid-tones of houses in the middle ground were then blocked in followed by darks with a rigger brush to suggest windows.

The mass of the road from foreground to middle ground was then blocked in with a mix of ultramarine blue plus light red plus raw sienna and white. This was a deliberately warmer hue than the colour of the bitumen road in the reference photo. Then the foreground pool was blocked in with a significantly lighter tone than that of the road and with a touch more of light red in the mix.

David then began to block in the snow with white warmed by a touch of ultramarine blue and light red. The tones were darkened a little around the perimeter of the snow area to give it form. The same light of the snow colour was then placed with a single horizontal stroke of the brush to suggest snow on the roof of each house. The right side of the middle ground was then painted with the same light of the snow colour.

Vertical thin darks were painted to suggest electricity poles followed by catenary curved thin darks to suggest the electricity wires in the foreground. David finished off with touching up details with a rigger brush.
